by all who examined it.

Michigan is well represented in the way of fine fruit, and we find among the contributors the following:

E. D. Lay, of Ypsilanti, twenty-three varieties of apples and five of pears.

J. Featherly, of Wayne, five varieties of apples and five of peaches.

B. G. Barker, of Plymouth, twelve varieties of apples and two of peaches.

John Ford, of Detroit, three varieties of peaches, one of plum, two drum-head.

Detroit Horticultural Society, a splendid moss vase, neatly filled with different kinds of fruit.

O. M. Rood, of Adrian, three varieties of apples.

J. C. Holmes, of Detroit, samples of Isabell and Catawaba grapes, current wine, manufactured in 1846, '47 and '48, egg plant, three specimens, and white solid cellery.

James Dougall, of Malden, also had a fine assortment of apples, pears, peaches, grapes and nectarines.

There was no doubt a great many other contributors from the State, but the above are all that fell under my observation. The fruit is not one half arranged, but thus far it bids fair to be a splendid display. It would do your readers good to walk through the long line of tables loaded with the rich lucious fruit of every variety and kind. To-morrow, however, will be the day for exhibition, and we cannot form much of an idea of what we may expect then.

I have during my stay here met with gentlemen
